Key Vote Delayed In Majlis

But No Obstacle Seen to Two Bills

By Jonathan Sharp

TEHRAN - Efforts to rush two key bills pertaining to negotiations for the release of the U.S. hostages through Iran's Majlis Tuesday were stalled for at least 24 hours because the 12-member council that must accept the laws could not get a quorum.

Majlis sources described the de-lay as technical and said there was no political obstacle to approving the bills. Some of the council members could not return to Tehran in time for the Majlis debate, a council spokesman said.

A senior Iranian official, mean while, said Tuesday that the date for the hostages' release was ap-proaching, but he denied rumors that they would be freed on Friday, the official Pars news agency reported.

Ahmad Azizi, director of hostage affairs in the office of Premier Ali Rajai, was quoted by Pars as saying that no agreement on the release had been reached, but he indicated strongly that one was expected.

Commitments Accepted

Mr. Azizi said that the Algerian government, acting as intermediary in the protracted negotiations over the hostages, had accepted "U.S. commitments ... concern-ing the return of all Iranian assets and necessary measures for returning the assets of the deposed shah and his relatives ..." He added, "It seems that the date of the release of the hostages is approach-

Meanwhile, Lech Walesa, leader of Poland's independent trade union Solidarity, arrived in Rome Tuesday for a six-day visit that will include a private audience with Pope John Paul II and talks with Italy's union leaders. It is the first trip to the West for Mr. Walesa. At the airport, Mr. Walesa was met by his stepfather, Stanislaw, who had arrived from the United States. The stepfather left Poland seven years ago and now lives in Jersey City, N.J.

Warsaw radio reported Mr. Walesa's arrival in Rome, noting that the visit was nonpolitical. Major Warsaw newspapers reported his planned departure on page one of Tuesday's editions.

The spokesman for the Rzeszow protesters said they had compiled a list of 69 demands, most of them local. The main demands, he added, included registration of the farmers' union and "a program of renewal in Polish agriculture."

Poland's supreme court held hearings Dec. 30 on the farmers' appeal to establish their "Independent, self-governing union of farmers." The court adjourned without a ruling, saying it needed time to study documents. Since then, Communist Party leader Stanislaw Kania and others have spoken against the union, saying existing "agriculture cir-cles" could be revitalized to represent peasants' interests.

About 300 farmers and workers remained in the former district off-ice of the now defunct Central Council of Trade Unions. Late Monday police broke up a sit-in by farmers and workers in a municipal building in nearby Ustrzyki Doine. The Rzeszow chapter of Solidarity condemned the action and renewed its threat of a warning strike in retaliation.

African Leaders Said to Criticize Libya-Chad Plan

LOME, Togo - African leaders discussed a proposed unity plan of Libya and Chad Tuesday, and in-formed sources said that they believed such an alliance would have no legal backing.

Eleven heads of state and two foreign ministers taking part in the informal talks decided to hold a formal session Wednesday to dis-cuss the possibility of calling a meeting of the Organization of African Unity.

Several African nations have condemned Libva's announced intentions regarding Chad. A joint Libyan-Chadian statement released by the Libyan news agency last week after provisional Presi-dent Goukouni Oueddei of Chad visited Tripoli, said the two countries would work for common unity and their borders would be opeend to citizens of the nations.

The sources said the heads of state were likely to call in Lome for another conference of African nations, including Chad and Libya, similar to the one in Lagos, Nigeria, in 1979 that set up the present Chad transition government of Mr. Goukouni.

Originated in Angola

The idea for a conference that would bring Mr. Nujoma face-to-face with leaders of the political parties from the territory originated in secret talks between South Africa and Angola some months ago. Angola, Namibia's northern oeighbor, is the black African state most directly involved in the cooflict, providing the insurgents with bases that make it a regular target of South African military assaults. The purpose of the meeting, it was thought initially, was to enable South Africa to show its own white voters that the parties from inside the territory had oot been coerced into accepting the Western plan, which calls for an internanonal peace-keeping force and the election of a constituent assembly under UN supervision.

Sources said that Mr. Mudge was warned that the political posi-tion of his alliance would almost certainly deteriorate with time if it was seen within the territory as the main party holding out against a cease-fire. They said he was told that this was happeaed to former Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa in Rhodesia when be took over a transitino government prior to a cease-fire in what later became

High Court Upholds Italy's Abortion Law

The Associated Press ROME - Italy's highest court has upheld the constitutionality of a 1978 law allowing free abortion on demand for women 18 years of age and older and abortion with the parents' consent for those who are younger.

The Constitutional Court on Monday rejected claims by Roman Catholic groups that the law conflicted with the constitutional rights to life, health and equal pro-

Another $10 million was earmarked as an endowment for the American University, onequarter of what Dr. Pedersen said was necessary to generate enough earnings to replace the lost opera> ting funds. The remaining $43 million was split up among some 250 scientific and cultural programs, including the venerable American Research Center, which coordinates U.S. university activities as well as all American archeological programs in Egypt.

Nothing After 1984

The research center's share for archaeological projects amounted to about $375,000 a year until 1984, after which there will be nothing.

Among activities that operate under the center's umbrella is a race against time and deterioration to record literally millions of pharaonic temple inscriptions in Luxor before they are obliterated.

The University of Chicago's Oriental Institute, called Chicago House in Luxor, already has spent a half-century at the task and it estimated that completion would require another 50 years even with continued funding by the U.S. government. But unless another source of money can be found, the work will end in May, 1984.

Other programs dealing with more immediate concerns also have been bard hit. One of the oldest, the U.S. Na-

In the past 15 years, these advances have raised total world pro-duction of food and feed grains from 951,000 metric tons in 1965 to an estimated 1.432 billion tons this year. Moreover, larger wheat, com and grain sorghum crops mean more livestock feed, better human diets and, usually, increased poultry production. But these bountiful gains have exacted

As developing countries struggle with the transition from simple, labor intensive farming to high technology agriculture, antiquated transportation systems oced to be modernized to move larger crops to expanding urban centers and to nonproductive back country areas. All this takes hard currency. It now costs more than $5 billion annually to provide fertilizer, pesticides and equipment for India's farms. The country's irrigation systems are nearing capacity, and oew sources of water will have to be found within the oext 20 years if the grain output is to keep pace with population growth.

For now, the green revolution may have hit its peak. On the far honzon, agricultural scientists envision new techniques in genetic engineering and recombinant DNA which could bring another breakthrough in food production. They talk of genetic changes in com and wheat plants that would endow them with their own nitrogen-fixing capabilities, eliminating the need for fertilizer. And they foresee the creation of plant strains with higher rates of photosynthesis, which vastly increase rates of growth.

But until these feats are pulled off, say agricultural economists who specialize in world food production, there will be oo dramatic leaps in food yields. Meanwhile, the rate at which more food is production. duced actually has been declining — while the world's population is increasing by 70 million people each year.

Nujoma's Inflexibility Iranian Denies Guilt in Embassy Killings Gets a Test in Geneva don's Central Criminal Court Tuesday to murdering the occupation of the Iranian embassy here last May.

GENEVA - "I have never seen Sam Nujoma agree to anything," a Western diplomat who has been following the negotiations on South-West Africa for four years said last week, just before the start of what was supposed to be the conference to end all conferences on the subject.

Whenever the insurgent movement that Mr. Nujoma has led since its inception two decades ago found itself under heavy diplomatie pressure to yield a point, the diplomat said, its leader would either reject the idea of compromise categorically, or sit, silent and im-mobile, while aides indicated that perhaps, maybe just this time, a concession might be possible. Mr. Nujoma's inflexibility may have explained how he has dominated the South-West Africa People's Organization for so long, but it also seemed to be a trait on which South African strategists could rely if they wanted to escape blame for another snag in the negotia-

If they were counting on it for this meeting — called to obtain agreement on a date for a ceasefire to which they agreed in princi-ple nearly three years ago — Mr. Nujoma has let them down.

Uotil this week his public procouncements have been limited to a declaration that he was ready to sign a cease-fire accord without any conditions. Then, finally, at a crowded news conference in Geneva Monday he seemed, at last, to be taking the kind of hard line for which he has long been noted.

To resolve the question raised by the parties from inside the terri-tory as to how the United Nations can impartially supervise an elec-tion there when the General Assembly has called the insurgent movement the "sole and authentic representative" of the territory's people, it has been suggested that this designation be given up in ex-change for a cease-fire date. Asked if he would agree to have a status that was other than unique, Mr. Nujoma responded, "under no cir-mstances. The remote chance of a deal in the final two scheduled days of the conference seemed, for the moment, to have been demolished by that response. But then Mr. Nu-joma said what he had apparently meant to say all along, that after a cease-fire it would be op to the Namibian people to decide at the ballot box who their representa-

speaking to Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate For-eign Relations Committee, during a break in the Haig hearings.

By Fred Barbash

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Newspapers and broadcasters have lost what they considered to be a major legal battle because of a Supreme Court ruling that made them more vulnerable to libel suits brought by private consultants to government.
The court, acting Monday on a suit against the Loudoun Times-

Mirror in Virginia, let stand an suppeals court ruling that such consultants are not public figures or public officials, who must meet the difficult requirement of proving media malice to win a libel action.
That requirement, which does not apply to private parties, often insulates reporting from costly libel trials and awards.

The Times-Mirror, and the in-dustry, had argued that the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling would stifle reporting on consultants, whose expanding role in government bas produced an increasing onmber of critical oews reports and exposes.

Archaeologist's Comments

The suit against the Times-Mirror stemmed from an article in September, 1978, concerning the Iroquois Research Institute, a prithe quality of the institute's work. The archaeologist said his com-ments were taken out of context, and the consultant sued the paper the reporter and the archaeologist for $200,000 each.

U.S. District Court Judge Albert Bryan threw the case out before trial, saying the consultant firm was a "public official" because of its work for the government, and that there was no evidence of malice by the oewspaper. The appeals court disagreed and sent the case back for trial, which may oow pro-ceed because of the Supreme

U.S. Told to Stay Out of 'Internal' Dispute

China Issues Stern Warning on Taiwan

By Bryan Johnson

PEKING - China has declared that it might "resort to nonpeace-ful means" in its relations with Taiwan and has warned the United States to stay out of any such 'internal" dispute.

The sharp affirmation Monday, only a week before the inauguration of the pro-Taiwan Reagan administration, charged that the United States had 'no right to meddle" in relations between Chi-na and the island republic it claims as part of its territory.

"It is our hope that Taiwan returns to the embrace of the motherland peacefully," said the weekly Peking Review in a lengthy denunciation of the U.S.-Taiwan relations act. "But if we are driven by the Taiwan authorities ... to resort to nonpeaceful means to solve the issue, that is entirely China's internal affair which the United States has no right to meddle in, let alone claim that it poses a threat to the peace and security of the western Pacific area."

The Chinese were particularly upset about parts of the act—passed by the U.S. Congress shortly after the establishment of offi-cial Chinese-U.S. relations in Janu-ary, 1979 — in which the United States promises to react to "any threat to the security ... of the people on Taiwan." The steady flow of U.S. arms to the island also was sharply criticized.

Careful Timing Seen

"The continued supply of weap-ons by the United States will only make the Taiwan authorities more arrogant," the weekly said, "and

Analysts here believe the article was carefully timed to precede the inauguration of President-elect

Reagan, an acknowledged friend of Taiwan who has stated that the former U.S. ally was given a raw deal in the terms of the Chinese-U.S. recognition agreement. The abrupt threat to use nonpeaceful methods seems a direct retort to the remarks of a Reagan adviser who recently visited Asia.

Ray Cline, in a December press, conference in Singapore, advised Peking to "return to the norms of civilized behavior" by renouncing the use of force against Taiwan. The outraged Chinese aimed a series of insults at Mr. Cline and quickly warned Mr. Reagan that any upgrading of U.S. relations with Taiwan could have grave con-sequences for Chinese-U.S. rela-

Uotil Monday, however, China had carefully refrained from any mention of using force against Taiwan — in line with its recent policy of trying to woo the Taiwanese back into the "embrace" of the mainland.

Only last week, it seemed the new Reagan administration might take part in a three-sided effort to improve relations between the two nations, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, made a brief visit to Peking and Taipei.

Although Sen. Stevens claimed he was not a Reagan envoy, he added that "it is going to take some understanding people bere

LOS ANGELES — City offi-cials, seeking to limit casualties, have embarked on a 15-year program to reinforce or raze 8,000 buildings they say would be unsafe in the massive earthquake that geologists cootend is inevitable some day in Southern California. Landlords and other property owners have vigorously opposed the program. But City Council members, warning that Los Angeles was "sitting on a time bomb," gave final approval last week.

After debating and reshaping the proposal for almost six years, the council enacted an ordinance requiring structural changes to be made in most unreinforced masonry buildings in the city.

The goal is to improve their abil-ity to survive the violent rocking and shaking of a severe carthquake and prevent the collapse of walls and upper floors that could injure occupants. If the owners decline to strengthen the structures, the Full compliance with the ordinance, city officials say, could reduce the toll of a severe earthquake to about 1,500 deaths and 8,000 injuries from the estimated 8,000 deaths and 34,000 injuries anticipated without it.

About 46,000 people live in the buildings covered by the ordinance. According to an estimate by the city, which landlords say is too low, property owners will have to spend about $750 million to sion in that high-pressure land with an almost audible hiss. Despite his substantial contribution to the success of the Camp David accords, Mr. Begin now is widely regarded at home and abroad as an obstacle to peace. Polls indicate that his withering Likud coalition will be defeated, returning to power a Labor alignment similar to those that have governed Israel for all hut the last three and a half years.

Labor Party leader Shimon Peres has said that any government he headed would at least temporarily halt settlements in occupied territories. He also is known to favor keeping the prime minister's office where it is in the uncontested western sector of Jerusalem and he has not threatened to annex the Golan Heights. All of those things, plus vague suggestions about a Jordanian solution to the Palestinian problem, have served as a cause or pretext, depending on your point of view, for optimism if Labor wins.

But some note should be taken of the fact that the government was not forced to call elections over settlements or any other aspect of Palestinian policy. It was an economic issue that led to Likud's loss of a majority. Deputy Prime Minister Yigael Hurvitz's resignation over a pay increase for teachers that he regards as intolerably inflationary, is a fitting reason for the demise of the Begin government. Mr. Hurvitz was brought into the government with a mandate to tame Israel's raging inflation. The teachers' raise would have undercut his authority, so he rightly resigned. It's worth remembering, too, that Mr. Begin was elected more because inflation-ravaged Israelis hoped he could deal with the economy more successfully than Labor, than because anyone expected him to make peace

It would be fruitless to speculate at this point about improved prospects for peace if

Prime Minister Begin's decision to call for early elections in Israel has released the tenwhich is the course the Reagan administration will follow in the Middle East. Despite expressions of sympathy for Israel from President-elect Reagan and comments about its strategic importance by both Alexander M. Haig Jr., Mr. Reagan's candidate for secretary of state, and Richard Allen, his choice for national security adviser, no one can be certain what specific policies the United States will adopt.

What's more, Labor is no less likely to act in ways that will compromise Israel's security than Likud. And there is little in the kinds of approaches involving Jordan that have been talked about that is likely to please either King Hussein or the Palestine Liberation Organization. And the PLO is as unacceptable to Labor as a negotiating partner as it is to

Then, too, there is the question of who would participate in a Peres government. There is an outside chance that the Labor alignment will win a majority and not be required to take in any outsiders, but that seems unlikely. There is a possibility that Mr. Hurvitz's Rafi faction, headed by former foreign and defense minister Moshe Dayan, and perhaps including former defense minister Ezer Weizman, will join with Labor, opening the door for more dramatic changes than Labor might dare alone. Mr. Dayan has suggested, for example, that Israel withdraw its troops from the occupied West Bank and let the Arabs living there govern themselves, reserving the right, of course, to return if things get out of hand. Nothing that dramatic is likely to be tried, but a new government promises to be at least a bit more flexible. In the Middle East, where nothing is ever entireclear and where change comes slowly if at all, that is something to be thankful for.

Even as he testified, a meeting of all parties to the Namibian dispute was under way in Geneva, to set a firm date for a cease-fire in the guerrilla war being waged against South Africa by the South-West Africa People's Organiza-tion, known as SWAPO, so that internationally supervised elec-tions can follow. South Africa long ago agreed to this Western-sponsored procedure for Namibia's independence but has haggled and delayed for nearly three years on putting it into effect.

That record, being cootinued at Geneva, suggests that South Africa has no intention of taking part in a process leading to a SWAPO gov-ernment on its border. At the least, Pretoria intends to delay as long as possible while working to strengthen other Namibian political parties more congenial to it. In either case, the government of Prime Minister P.W. Hostage Issue

Some people think it is easy for a president to avoid the use of arms; they charge Mr. Carter with being "soft." To the contrary, it requires will and courage for a president to say no to the advocates of force. President Kennedy, advised by his brother Robert, showed those qualities in the Cuban mis-sile crisis in 1962. Mr. Carter showed them in the Iran hostage crisis. His policy had its flaws, but it was right and brave in putting the safety of the hostages first despite our frustration. Will Mr. Reagan similarly be able to resist the siren song of military retalia-

The China policy of the Carter administration is another achievement in foreign policy that may be in jeopardy if the loose talk of Mr. Reagan and his people cootinues. Mr. Carter built on the Nixon breakthrough to cement a relation-ship with the People's Republic that is a crucial factor in international security...

The Panama Canal treaties were one more act of courage: something that presidents since Eisenhower had recognized must be done but had oot had the political old links with right wing exploitation and oppression in Central America. Here again we may soon be nostalgic for Mr. Carter.

His greatest personal achieve-ment was of course Camp David. We tend to take it for granted oow, DARIS - In NATO's efforts to catch up with the accelerated Soviet defense program, oot the least important sector is the Greek-Turkish flank, linking Europe to Asia.

During the past year there were perceptible indications of improvement in this area but there can be oo guarantee how long the trend will continue. A Turkish army coup, temporarily replacing the stalemated democratic government in Ankara, has enormously reduced the frightening rise of terrorism there.

Moreover, more stability facilitated arrangement of large loans and credits from other NATO partners and the strengthening of Turkey's military forces with mod-ern weapons. All this combined to give the nation more self-confi-dence. Crisis settlement talks between Greek-Cypriots and Turk-ish-Cypriots have now continued for a relatively long time and in a less hysterical atmosphere.

No Fascist Tinge

There have been several seizures of political power by the Turkish military and it is almost sure that, as in the past, the generals will seek to hand authority back to a oormal civilian government when it believes internal security has been re-established. The Turkish army is not tinged with fascism but stands behind the traditions of Kemal Ataturk, who created the

At the same time, there has been an important shift in Greece. returned to NATO as a full military partner under alliance command. This almost certainly will produce another strategic debate m the Athens parliament.
In 1979, with Mr. Caramanlis as premier, Athens made a secret deal with Moscow granting the Russians naval repair privileges on the Aegean island of Syros. The title of the accord referred to Soviet "auxiliary vessels" without "armed flags." But a French naval attache saw armed Soviet ships flying na-val flags in Syros some weeks later and concluded it was a quasi-base.

Slightly Furtive

Mr. Caramanlis contended this deal was purely a "commercial" arrangement between two private companies; but oo such private companies exist in the Soviet Uoion. The crucial point is that his slightly furtive agreement can legally terminate any time after Jan. 1, 1981 if either party so wishes. We must oow see whether, de jure or de facto, this important Syros agreement is denouoced by Athens. The last commanding offi-cer of NATO's Mediterranean headquarters considered the issue vital. He argued forcibly that oo other member of the Western coalition has ever negotiated a similar arrangement with the alliance's main opponent. It is perfectly reasonable to as-

Mr. Mugabe has taken a calculated risk with apparently great dexterity. On the one hand, putting Mr. Tekere out to grass simultaneously disposes of an emharrassment in dealing with the jittery white skilled cadres and with the little less jittery foreign investors and at the same time reduces the power and intrigues of the ZANU extremists inside the government. It reduces the ever-contingent threat to Mr. Mugabe's supremacy. On the other hand, the demot on of Joshua Nkomo removes the hand of the Patriotic Front (ZAPU) from a lever of power, the be too clever hy half will soon be seen. Mr. Mugabe must have considered the possibility that Mr. Nkomo would be forced to withdraw from the coalition. Such a break-up would at this early stage hardly suit him. It would re-emphasize tribal animosities and Shona and Ndebele. So he presumably thinks he has taken Mr. Nkomo"s measure. Mr. Nkomo is the most pliable Ndehele partner he could have. His successors will be harder men. It will then become more difficult to proceed with the process of returning the Ndebele guerrillas to civil life or integrating them in the national army; and that will have repercussions on the Shona guerrillas.

As commissioner for agriculture, Mr. Gundelach strove to curb spending on farm surpluses, while maintaining the basic principles of the common agricultural policy — to insure stable markets, fair farm incomes, reasonable consumer

A 'Miracle Drug' That Backfired

By Robert Reinhold New York Times Service

TEW YORK - When it went oo the market 13 years ago it seemed like a true miracle drug —a drug apparently free of risk, that would lower cholesterol in the blood and thereby prevent beart attacks.

Soon physicians were prescrib-ing clofibrate for millions of patients in the United States and Europe, mostly men considered at high risk for cardiovascular disease because of elevated levels of fatty substances in their blood. of faity substances in their 0,000. The drug seemed to offer modern man the luxury of having his cake and eating it too — that is, of continuing to devour steak and butter without fear of heart attack tiest by taking a little care. attack just by taking a little cap-sule four times a day.

It was too good to be true. Far from saving lives, it now appears ciolibrate actually increases the death rate among its users. A decade-long study run by the World Health Organization recently reported that men regular-ly taking the drug were 25 per-cent more likely to die of a broad range of disorders, including cancer, stroke, respiratory disease and, ironically, heart attack, than those who got a placebo capsule.

As a result, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration bas scheduled hearings this month to consider whether the drug should be further restricted, possibly even withdrawn. Already, doctors have sharply cut their prescriptions from their peak in 1975, when the U.S. makers — Ayerst Laboratories — rang up clofi-brate sales of about $30 million. The clofibrate experience raises many questions. How, for example, can dangerous drugs be kept off the market without raising prohibitive test-ing hurdles that would also bar good ones? It seems unlikely that the hazards of clofibrate could have been noticed until it was widely used.

Also, if drugs must be licensed before they are fully understood, should there not then be better surveillance of their effects afterward? Will apparently healthy people who take such drugs as tranquilizers and birth control pills for years suffer imsuspected ripple effects" from them years later? Can drug advertising, often the doctor's main source of informacon, be better controlled?

Long after solid evidence suggested that closibrate was hazardous and largely ineffective.

Ayerst — a division of American Homeproducts Corp. - continued to promote it vigorously in medical journals as useful in "coronary prone" patients. Only recently, federal authorities compelled the company to start supplying corrective information and to destroy misleading brochures.

The episode has made medical researchers sadder but wiser about the possibility of prevent-ing heart disease by eliminating the "risk factors," such as elevated blood lipids, that are statistically associated with heart disease bot cannot be linked to it by a causative chain of proof. In-deed, it has compelled some renewed thinking about the very role of lipids in bumans, suggesting that raised levels of these fats - mainly cholesterol and triglycerides - may actually be beneficial in older people, since pro-longed artificial lowering of them is linked to many causes of

But such consequences were scarcely imagined in the early 1960s, when initial results of animal and human tests of clofi-brate, which showed little toxicity, stirred excitement among cardiologists. "This seemed like 'the answer," recalled Robert Levy, director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, who says he would now prescribe clofibrate only in rare instances.

Many practicing physicians agreed. The drug was given a further boost in 1968 by medical philanthropist Mary Lasker. She and heart surgeon Michael deBa-key persuaded the press to generate publicity about clofibrate among doctors and patients alike. And oo the basis of a study of 1,400 United Airlines employees that showed non-users appearing to suffer 3.7 times as many heart attacks as users, Dr. DeBakey and Mrs. Lasker tried to persuade Congress to appropriate $49 million for an enormous study of the drug.

Things Went Wrong

In the early 1970s, things began to go wrong. Doctors began to report muscle aches, flo-like symptoms, increased heart size, arrhythmia and other side effects. More doubts were raised in 1975 by the first results of the Coronary Drug Project, a national al experiment involving 8,341 men who had had beart attacks, testing whether lipid-lowering drugs would protect such men from a second attack.

The study not only confirmed the side effects, but also found no evidence that clofibrate was useful in preventing oew heart at-tacks. Moreover, it showed that the drug lowered cholesterol by an average of only about 7 per-cent. It reduced triglycerides much more sharply, but the link between those fats and heart disease is very uncertain. Later, the study found a 54-percent excess of gall bladder disease among clotibrate users.

"When the project ended, we no longer thought of clofibrate as a panacea," Dr. Levy said.

But the question of whether the drug could prevent first heart attacks was still open. To find oot, the WHO studied 15,000 bealthy men in Scotland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The results were both puzzling and discouraging.

The clofibrate-treated group did have a statistically significant lower rate of con-fatal heart attacks. But deaths from a broad range of causes were 25 percent higher than in the untreated control groups in all three countries and in every age group.

Chance alone cannot explain such results, said study director Michael Oliver of the Royal Infirmary in Edinburgh, Dr. Oliver, Prolonged use of clofibrate 8 9 10 11 YEARS AFTER BEGINNING USE OF DRUG

The men in group I had high cholesterol and were treated with clofibrate; those in group II had high cholesterol, no clofibrate; those in group III, low cholesterol, no clofibrate.

a cardiologist who once had high hopes for the drug, speculates that either elofibrate damages human cells or that lowering cho-lesterol is itself unhealthy.

"We don't know why cholesterol is raised in middle-age men," he said. "We assume this is connected to diet, but it is possible that this is some sort of adaptive phenomenon to the en-vironment which we in the Western world choose. Cholesterol is an integral part of the function of every cell of the body. It is conceivable that by removing a small proportion of it steadily over many years you alter the re-sistance of the cell to infection or possibly advance its aging pro-

By most accounts, the drug was originally advanced in good faith. "The drug was well stud-ied," said Marioo Finkel, an associate director of the FDA's drug bureau. "People were shocked by the WHO study — oobody even suspected. But the WHO study required 15,000 patients over five years — no drug company can do that. These long-term risks will oever be uncovered notil a drug is put on the market. Scientists See New Hope Of Curbing Snail Fever

By Walter Sullivan New York Times Service

CLEVELAND - Several recent velopments have increased hope that one of the great scourges of mankind, affecting an estimated 200 million people in Asia, Africa, Sooth America and the Caribbean can be brought under control and some forms of it even eradicated. The disease, schistosomiasis also called snail fever or bilharziasis, is caused by a parasitic worm. Part of the worm's life cycle must occur within a water-dwelling snail. The mobile larva that emerges from the snails can penetrate the skin of a wader and develop into a worm up to an inch long within the blood vessels.

The worm's eggs lodge in various tissues and cause enlargement of the liver and spleen. Impairment of blood flow discharges blood and eggs into the digestive or urinary tract, depending on which form of the disease is involved. Unless the disease is treated before it reaches an advanced stage, death comes from internal bleeding or other effects. .

Several Developments

Because of the proliferation of irrigation projects in developing countries, the disease is spreading. But health authorities are optimistic about controlling it on the basis of several developments:

Tests conducted in Brazil, China, Japan, the Philippines and Zambia under auspices of the World Health Organization, a UN agency, and other sponsors have hown a new drug, praziquantel, to be highly effective against all forms of the disease. A single pill is effective in many cases.

· "Targeted" concentration of drug therapy on those who seem prime carriers of the disease, a strategy that helped eradicate smallpox, appears effective against schistosomiasis. It is being tested in villages in Kenya, Egypt and the • The prospects for a vaccine against the disease, previously considered slim, have been improved by evidence that under certain circumstances the worms that cause it are susceptible to the body's immune defenses. The developments were reported at a symposium on geographic the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Toron-

There have been treatments for the disease, but they have many drawbacks. Unlike other drugs that are effective against the disease, praziquantel seems to have no serious side effects, it does not have to be injected or given in mul-tiple doses, which would limit the practicality of treatment in remote illages, and it is effective against all forms of the disease.

Two forms of the disease - the mansoni variety, focused on the digestive tract, and haematobium, in which eggs lodge around the urinary tract - are found in Egypt. The mansoni type is also native to other parts of Africa and to South America. The third type, japonicum, whose eggs pass out through the digestive tract, is found only in the Far East.

Mostly Children

In the villages surveyed it has been found that about 10 percent. of the people are heavily infected. There are indications that many of the others have a genetically transmitted resistance to the para-

In the Nile delta, where the hacmatobium form is rampant, most of the heavily afflicted victims are children, who contract the disease by playing in canals infected because of poor sanitation practices Other residents tend to be lightly infected or oot infected at all. It appears 'that if treatment is focused on those heavily stricken or heavily infected, spread of the disease can be curtailed.

Unlike most parasites, the worms of schistomiasis do not multiply within the human host, although they produce many eggs. To be infected by many worms, a victim must be exposed many times. A single worm seems to cause little or no harm. Furthermore, the worm seems to have found a way to keep out other immature worms and in many cases prevents further infections.

As the worm matures, it becomes resistant to the body's defenders. Scientists hope that, if the interactions of the parasites with the body's defenders can be understood, or if the genetic trait that his deceptions are detected. This enables many people to resist an robust portrayal is achieved with-invasion can be identified, a path out hint of effort and with no sign toward a vaccine might be found.

Richard Armstrong, on loan from the Welsh National Opera, conducted with such over-attention to detail that the music sometimes suffered, with ponderous tempi at times resulting in a flaccid lack of tension. In general, though, he kept a firm grip on his forces and drew an unusually good performance from the orchestra. The Komische Oper's extraordinary chorus, trained by Michael Junge and Gerhart Wuestner, attracted the only bravos at the end of the performance; it richly deserved the praise.

Back from the dead

Since 1961, the World Wildlife Fund has rescued 33 mammals and birds from the brink of extinction. It has allocated more than $40 million to conservation projects around the world. It has created or supported 260 National Parks on five continents - a total area almost twice the size of Western Europe. There is still much more to be done.

THE WORLD WILDLIFE FUND was formed to help preserve life in the natural world. Our scope is the whole of nature - plants, mammals, fishes, birds, and their habitats. We raise and allocate money to preserve species threatened with extinction. We work to conserve natural areas that containendangered wildlife.

Here is an outline of some of the things we have achieved so far. You can become a participant in these projects - and new

Operation Tiger

Fifty years ago there were 100,000 Tigers in the wild. Eight different sub-species existed in Eastern Turkey, India, Iran, China, the Soviet Union and South-east Asia. Today, there are not more than 5000

In 1972 the World Wildlife Fund launched its Operation Tiger to save the Tigers that remained. Nine Tiger reserves have been established in India and three in Nepal.

Tiger conservation projects have also been set up in Bangladesh, Bhutan, Indonesia and Thailand.

Saving the Spotted Cats

If women now feel embarrassed to appear in the furs of Tiger, Leopard, Cheetah, Jaguar or Ocelot, it is largely thanks to the World Wildlife Fund.

As a result of a vigorous campaign, backed by famous people including movie stars and fashion leaders, the International Fur Trade Federation called on its members to stop trading in the skins of Tiger, Snow Leopard and Clouded Leopard. Fashion magazines agreed not to advertise the furs of endangered animals.

India, Nepal, Pakistan, Kenya and Tanzania imposed export bans on furs of endangered species. Britain, the United States and Canada pnt controls on impor-

The World's Rarest Reptile

Lonesome George is the last known survivor of the Pinta Island species of Giant Tortoises in the Galapagos Islands. It was here that Charles Darwin found living evidence to support his theory of the "evolution of species" and the "survival of the fittest. Major World Wildlife Fund grants each year support the conservation work of the Charles Darwin Research Station. But for Lonesome George the future is hleak. Unless a female of his kind can be found the species will cease to exist when he finally goes to his ancestors.

A Future for Elephants

Widespread poaching of Elephants for their ivory has roused fears that they may soon be threatened with extinction. Nobody knows how many Elephants there are in Africa or Asia today.

The World Wildlife Fund is supporting a three year study of the interaction between Man, Elephant and habitat, both in Africa and Asia, including investigations into illegal ivory trading, and studies to develop Elephant management

"The Seas Must Live"

In 1976 the World Wildlife Fund launched its biggest campaign, under the title, "The Seas Must Live".

The seas are polluted by the effluents of the industrialized world. Whales are being hunted to extinction. Turties are robbed of their eggs when they come ashore to breed, or are slaughtered for their meat, shell and oil. Crocodiles are killed to make handbags and shoes. Walruses are hunted for their ivory. Seals are bludgeoned to provide fur coats.

The threat of extinction hangs over ten species of Whale, Dolphin and Porpoise; six species of Seal; all Dugongs and Manatees, all coastal Crocodiles, and 30 species of sea and coastal birds. The last Caribhean Monk Seal was sighted 25

Marine Sanctuaries

The largest project in the sea campaign is to provide sea sanctuaries for Whales, Dolphins and Seals.

Marine Turtles, most of which are endangered, are to be protected at nesting sites in the Gulf of California, the Scychelles, Malaysia, Panama and else-

Polar Bear Success

Perhaps the World Wildlife Fund's most successful effort has been conservation of the Polar Bear. Its survival was threatened hy hunters using rifles, motorboats and aircraft among the ice floes of the Arctic, and by disturbance of its habitat.

The World Wildlife Fund helped bring Polar Bear specialists together to co-ordinate research and protection.

As a result, the five circumpolar nations - Norway, Canada, the Soviet Union, the U.S.A. and Denmark - have signed an agreement to ban killing of the Polar Bear, except by local Eskimos who depend on it for survival.

Denmark has established the Northeast Greenland National Park, largest in the world, which protects important denning areas of the Polar Bear, Norway has created Polar Bear reserves in the Svalbard archipelago.

Birds of Prey

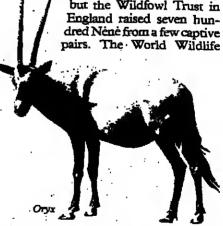

Eagles, Falcons, Buzzards, Kites and Condors have become threatened. Their decline has been accelerated by the destruction of their feeding and nesting places: by the collection of eggs, and above all hy pesticides which enter their food chains leading to sterility and malformation of young and mass deaths. A captive breeding programme for the Peregrine Falcon in the United States aided by the World Wildlife Fund is now raising 100 birds a year, Also, with World Wildlife Fund backing, several European countries are co-operating to save the White-tailed Sea Eagle. Nests have been guarded and breeding has improved following the provision of uncontaminated food at crucial periods in the hreeding cycle.

The Oryx and the Néné

The Arabian Oryx, a creamy white antelope with long graceful horns, had been hunted almost to extinction. The Fauna Preservation Society, with World Wildlife Fund help, mounted an expedition to capture a few of the last thirty and ship them to the Phoenix Zoo in Arizona. There, through captive breeding, they have become the nucleus of a world herd. The Nene Goose had been reduced to fewer than fifty but the Wildfowl Trust in Fund flew two hundred of them back to Hawaii, where they are thriving once more in their natural habitat.

Conserving Wetlands Around the World

Through help and finance the World Wildlife Fund has helped establish reserves or protect wetlands in many parts of the world. In the United States a substantial purchase of tidal salt marshes along the New Jersey coast has helped. preserve the breeding, wintering, and feeding grounds of more than 300 bird species. In Britain, the World Wildlife Fund provided funds for the purchase of Caerlaverock Wildfowl Reserve - winter feeding place for Barnacle Geese. In Austria, the World Wildlife Fund took over the lease of hunting rights to help establish a reserve in the Seewinkel-Neusiedler Lake area and also purchased

In other developments, Japanese Finance Minister Michio Watanabe said the government will stick are said the government will stick to its plan for amending the 1927 banking law despite a first the 1927 banking law despite strong opposition from banks and securities firms to some of the proposals. it is sent to parliament. Banks in particular have complained that it runs counter to the principle of liberalizing the law, industry sources

Currently, banks are allowed in principle to engage in dealing in national bonds as well as underwriting them, but they refrain from dealing in them under special agreement with securities firms.
The sources said the ministry's plan would require banks to obtain special licenses to deal in bonds. Japanese banks have urged the tional bonds they have underwritten to the public and trade them in the secondary market, the sources said. The banks point out that they are forced to underwrite large amounts of national bonds to help the government cover its budget deficits, the sources said. Also, banks have complained about the extent of disclosures about their business that would be required under the proposals.

Reserve Changes

Separately, the Bank of Japan announced it will raise the reserve requirement for foreign currency deposits to 0.50 percent from 0.25 percent, starting Feb. 1.

The bank said it asked the finance ministry for approval of the change, which is expected. The measure is designed to bring the reserve requirement ratios for foreign corrency deposits, freed from controls Dec. 1, closer to those for ven-denominated bank deposits, which range from 2 percent to 3.76 percent for large banks, the Bank of Japan said.

The bank said the measure was not aimed at curbing the sharp increase in foreign currency deposits that has occurred since December. Foreign currency deposits at 20 leading banks rose about 300 bilbon yen in December to a total balance of 2.34 trillion yen, the central bank said.

The possibility that the Japan will soon resume the flotation of samurai bonds, yen bonds issued by foreign entities in Japan, was raised by securities industry sources. They said the finance ministry was discussing with underwriters whether negotiations can be reo-pened for the floration by the end of January of a 27-billion-yen New Zealand bond originally scheduled for last November, when the issuance of such debt was suspend-

WASHINGTON — Major banks have privately told Chrysler they want to wipe out about half of their $1.2 billion in claims against the auto company by taking an accelerated cash payment for a fraction of the debt, severing their remaining ties with Chrysler, according to sources.

The proposal, made during critical ne-gotiations over Chrysler's future, is subject to different interpretations. It could be a plus for Chrysler, reducing its debt and interest expense. Or, it could indicate that the banks no longer believe in Chrysler's long-term chances and want to cut their losses as soon as possible, said sources close to the negotiations.

[Treasury Secretary William Miller Tuesday said Chrysler's plan to gain a further $400 million in federal loan guaran-tees is inadequate and a new one needs to be presented by Wednesday, according to a Reuters report.

Under the proposal, the banks would settle for perhaps as bittle as 15 cents to 20 cents on the dollar on roughly $600 million in loans to Chrysler, but would expect prompt cash payment on a preferred basis. The money would come from this year's sales of Chrysler cars and trucks, rather than directly from the $400 million in guaranteed loans that the company hopes to obtain with the federal government's approval, according to the sources.

The proposed arrangements with the banks would be a distinct plus for Chrysler if it wins the $400 million in loan guarantees and sees its sales grow this year. Its hopes for 1981 have recently improved with the success of its current re-bate plan tied to the prime interest rate. The company can generate cash quickly if the cars are moving," said one source.

At an average price of $6,000 per car, a gain of 25,000 cars sold a month would produce $150 million in revenue out of which to pay the banks, this source noted. That kind of improvement is possible this spring, the source said.

The proposal by the banks indicates however, that they are now reluctant to bet on that recovery, other sources said. As the oegotiations between Chrysler and its banks continued, the company was also meeting with top United Auto Workers union negotiators, seeking $673 million in wage concessions over the next 21 months. The company's proposal would freeze pay and benefits for Chrysler's 90,000 UAW workers.

The arrangement with the banks and the wage concessions are part of a new financial plan that is meant to cut costs by $1 billion this year and a total of $2 billion by 1985. Without these savings, the loan board says it will oot approve the $400 million in loan guarantees.

Preliminary Approval Seen

UAW President Douglas Fraser said Monday the union has offered to make new, undisclosed financial concessions in an effort to win approval of the $400 million loan guarantee. The UAW and Chrysler moved negotiations on the current wage contract to Washington Mon-day, to permit closer contact with Treasury Secretary William Miller, chairman of the loan board.

Mr. Fraser did not disclose details of the UAW proposal, but when asked if it involved more concessions, he said: "That would be a fair summary.

Under the Chrysler Loan Act, Congress is given to days to review loan board decisions, putting the final decision on Chrysler's current request into the hands of the incoming Reagan administration. But Chrysler officials believe a preliminary approval now would significantly improve their chances of a favorable final de-cision after Jan. 20, when Rocald Reagan's Treasury-secretary designate, Donald Regan, will take Mr. Miller's place on the loan board.

That would be higher than last year, when these capital invest-ments declined 0.5 percent from 1979 in real terms.

According to the latest estimate, based on a recent survey of firms, non-farm business plans to spend $326.1 billion for new plant and equipment in 1981, which, without inflation adjustment, would be 10.8 percent more than 1980. That compares with an 8.8 percent increase between 1979 and 1980.

Assertive Role

The appointments indicated that the State Department would play a more assertive role in in-ternational economics and underscored the Reagan commitment to tax-cut legislation as a key element in the new administration's economie program, analysts said.

The appointment of Mr. Sprinkel to the chief debt and currency management job at the Treasury received mixed reaction.

He is a well-qualified monetary economist and l am personally pleased with the appointment,"said Robert Solomon, a former adviser to the Federal Reserve's board of governors, oow a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution. "But," he added, "I don't know how familiar he is with the international economic side of the job."

There were also some questions raised at Wall Street bond bouses about what Mr. Sprinkel's monetarism, with its emphasis on the money supply, implied for financial markets in setting terms for Treasury borrowings. "It could be a disadvantage," said one specialist, adding however that Mr. Sprinkel's experience at Harris Trust "should

The appointment of Mr. Ture, an economist rather than the lawyer who has traditionally been appointed to the top tax policy job, signals another significant change. It was seen as an indication that greater attention would probably be paid to the overall economic impact of tax policy. Mr. Ture is an old friend and associate of Charls Walker, who had been deputy Treasury secretary in the Nixon administration and who served as a top Reagan tax adviser.

The moves of Mr. Rashish and Mr. Hormats to the State Department meant, said one aide of the new administration, that there would be more linkage between international and domestic ecocomic policy. Secretary of State-designate Alexander Haig Jr. "believes that economics is closely linked with foreign policy," this aide stressed, adding that there would be greater emphasis on getting the support of domestic constituencies for bull market since 1975 and 1976." Raymond Baker Jr., first vice president of Los Angeles-based Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, expects prices to turn upward sooner than most analysts. "I think prices will be higher than today's evel six months from now."

Mr. Baker does not advise inves-tors to sit out the present period. "On a fundamental basis, there's too much value out there," he says. Warner Set To Market Cancer Test

By Barnaby J. Feder New York Times Service

NEW YORK ---- Warner-Lambert Co. has entered the race to develop marketable tests for cancer with an agreement allowing it to commercialize cancer-detection technology pioneered by researchers at Pennsylvania State University. Analysts say that as many as 60 companies are currently exploring the nascent market.

Eugene Davidson and Sally Bolmer, the researchers who developed the technology licensed to Warner-Lambert, said that their technique appeared to identify a much broader range of cancers than techniques currently on the market. Warner-Lambert said it would attempt to confirm their results and then subject the technique to a broad clinical study.

Diagnostic kits for the early detection of cancer will, over the next decade, be the biggest medical technological achievement outside of the drug area," said David Tal-bot, an analyst at Drexel Burnham

A oumber of major pharmaceu-tical companies, as well as smaller diagnostics specialists such as the New England Nuclear Corp., are leading the pack, Mr. Talbot said. He ooted that Abbott Laboratories, which he believes to be the market leader, last fall introduced a test aimed at diagnosing gas-trointestinal cancer and has perhaps five other tests in various Abbou's lead could be as much as four or five years over a compa-ny like Warner," he said. Warner-Lambert would need the approval of the Food and Drug Administration for any test it decided to market, but analysts said the company might be able to market a kit based on the Penn State technology by 1983.

The technology with which Warner-Lambert hopes to narrow that gap is known as tumor-specif-ic glycoprotein assay. The Penn State research team discovered that glycoproteins, a common element in blood, are altered in the presence of cancer cells. They then used radioimmunological testing techniques, which attach a radioactive tag to the deformed glycoproteins in a blood sample. As a result of the Penn State research, glycoprotein joins a grow-ing list of cancer "markers."

Stage Is Set for U.S.-AT&T Antitrust Case

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON --- One of tho biggest antitrust trials in U.S. history is set to open Thursday with the future of the nation's telecommunications industry at stake. Pitted against each other are the federal government and American Telephone & Telegraph.

Only within the last several weeks, have the two sides made serious attempts at settling the case. which was initiated six years ago. In a meeting with the trial judge, U.S. District Judge Harold Greene last Monday, the two sides laid out a conceptual framework for a settlement, but the judge, citing a series of earlier delays, said he would not grant their request for yet an-

If the trail goes ahead, Justice Department lawyers will ask the court to separate Bell Telephone's local and long distance facilities and also split the companies that provide that local service from Western Electric and Bell Telephone Laboratories, the two subsidiaries that provide equipment and basic research to Bell's 23 operating companies. Yet, despite the enormity of the proceeding, AT&T, on several other fronts, may find 1981 the year of the courtroom. An appeal of a jury's award last spring of $1.8 billion to MCI Communications Corp. in a private antitrust trial and another case with similar financial stakes brought by Litton Industries against AT&T will be heard also beginning this week.

Monopoly Behavior

In the government's case, Justice Department lawyers will try to document what they charge is a pattern of monopoly behavior. A 1978 department filing alleges that AT&T and "their co-conspirators have used their positions of dominance in long-distance transmission, equipment manufactur-ing, and local franchise monopolies, and the leverage derived there-from, to suppress this new competition and to maintain and enchace their monopoly power. "Simply put, defendants have abused their position of dominance through a oumber of exclusionary and restrictive practices designed to preserve and extend their market power and monopoly positions throughout the markets for telecommunications service telecommunications equipment," the government said. At issue is not only the behavior of the nation's largest company, but also the workings of the comnumications regulatory apparatus of the Federal Communications

AT&T's defense will be pinned largely on its relationship with the FCC and the state regulatory bodies. AT&T's basic defense is that it acted to discharge its regulatory obligations to "provide the public with high-quality telecommunications at reasonable rates," to protect that system, to compete fairly and "mitigate the cream-skimmefforts of new competitors, the company said in a 1980 filing. The company repeatedly asserts that its business relationships with competitors, particularly in the late 1960s, took place at a time when competition in telecommunications was still in a formative, uncertain state and 'AT&T actions must be considered in that context.

The company has argued that if the government wins the case, oot only will the shareholders and its one million employees suffer, but the public's phone rates and ser-vice, the economy and national defense will also suffer.

The company has told the court that the financial implications of divestiture are staggering and would require the court "to restructure the ownership and financing of $100 billion of fixed assets."

"Uoder that kind of horizontal dismemberment, the cost of local service would necessarily go up." said AT&T lawyer Harold Levy. that initiated last year's legislation. "The support and contribution" of But other federal officials, in-Bell equipment and long-distance branches to local service rates would be lost and that would be a significant cost incurred to the public over time," Mr. Levy said. On defense, the company has argued that its network system "has produced unparalleled scientifie research and development and significant contributions to national security. There is no reasonablo possibility," ATT concluded, "that the notried, fragmented structure proposed by the antitrust divisioo would produce comparable results.

Making Sense

The larger question may well be whether or oot the government's request for divestiture — an anti-trust remedy that President-elect Reagan criocized during the campaign - makes sense in the 1981 munications environment.

While legislation proposing AT&T divestiture has never moved in Coogress, the House Commerce Committee last summer and a oumber of senators have endorsed measures that would permit Bell to et into the computer field through separate, independent subsidiary, a far less significant restructuring proposal and one that Bell wholeheartedly endorses holeheartedly endorses.

The FCC has issued in final form a decision that adopts just such a structural alternative, although that ruling has launched what is certain to be a lenghty appeals process. AT&T enthusiastically has begun the complex process of restructuring itself under those guidelines. But those legislative and regulatory initiatives set up precedents that most observers say Judge Greene may not be able to ignore.

Leda and the Swan Land in London After Short Escapade From Cyprus United Press International

NICOSIA --- A 2,000 year-old Roman mosaic stolen from a museum in Cyprus shortly before Christmas has been found in London, police say. The mosaic depicts Leda and the Swan, a scene from Greek mythology in which Leda is tempting Zeus, the father of the gods who is disguised as a swan.

Police said the mosaic was discovered Monday by British police working with Cypriot authorities when they arrested a Cypriot painter, Andreas Kanaris, 25. in London.

THE LAST WORD An Eyewitness Account of the Trial of Jeremy Thorpe By Auberon Waugh. Little, Brown. 240 pp. $11.95.

Reviewed by Joseph McLellan

SEVERAL things are certain.

One is that on the night of Friday, Oct. 24, 1975, on a road near the coast of Somerset in England, an airline pilot named Andrew Gino Newton shot and killed a Great Dane named Rinka belonging to a male model and former stable boy named Norman Scott. Newton then pointed his gun at Scott, but apparently it jammed. "I will get you." shouted Newton and drove away, leaving Scott sobbing hysterically beside the corpse of his dog. The following year, Newton was convicted of "being in possession of a gun with intent to endanger life," which seems to describe the situation. But that was hardly the end of it. In May, Jeremy Thorpe resigned as leader of the Liberal

Further Implications

On May 8, 1979, in Number One Court at the Old Bailey in London, a judge and jury began to hear evidence on further implica-tions of the incident. Thorpe and three associates were charged with conspiracy to murder Norman Scott, whose public remarks about a long-ago homosexual relationship were endangering Thorpe's career. One of the most sensational trials of the century was underway - a trial whose six weeks of testi mony and deliberation provide Auberon Waugh abundant material for a most unusual book, in which he demonstrates some of the satirical and stylistic skills of his father, the late Evelyn Waugh. Although known primarily as a jour-nalist. Auberon Wangh brings a fiction-writer's sense of scene and character to this work of nonfic-

Waugh admits that he is hardly a totally disinterested party. When Thorpe stood for re-election just before the trial, Wangh recalls: "Although not by nature a politi-cal person, I agreed that I should stand in North Devon against Mr. Thorpe . . in the Dog Lovers' interest." This was plainly a reference to the murdered Great Dane and caused a little ripple of embarrassment among the more enthusiastic supporters of Jeremy Thorpe.

It is not merely power that corrupts but the quest for power.
Wangh now recalls, perhaps with a tinge of regret, some "unscrupulous political accommodations, like affecting a greater interest in doggies generally, and a greater concern for the endangered doggies of North Devon in particular, than I naturally felt." Even with such compromises, Waugh lost, coming in fifth among the "rag, tag and bobtail of 'fringe' party candidates" who "made no noticecandidates" who "made no notice-able difference to the result." But perhaps his assessment is too modest; if he did not attract many votes to himself, he may have deflected some to the Conservative candidate who swept Jeremy Thorpe out of office.

The result of the trial, a verdict of not guilty, was even less satisfactory to Waugh. This book is his revenge on the British system of government and criminal justice. and a rich, intricate revenge it is.

He follows the trial, day by day, through some luxuriantly tawdry and often comic testimony; he hops gleefully on absurdities, which the trial supplied in abundance; he hurls verbal acid at the British Establishment and the way it defends its members because their social class, regardless what crimes they may have cor mitted. A PLAYER who thinks for a very long time over the play of a single card sometimes finds himself in trouble. In a social setting he will make himself very unpopular with his opponents, and in a duplicate game he will attract the wrath of the tournament director for delaying the proceedings. In a world team championship, he would run the risk of incurring a slow-play penalty.

But a single lengthy hesitation in a crucial situation is acceptable in a head-to-head team match if the player is fairly brisk in his actions for the rest of the session. What may have been one of the longest buddles of the year occurred on the diagramed deal. The hero, or culprit, was a player who is not usually considered among the

Travel Costs Run High

LONDON - How well does a talent travel? Simple question, maybe, but the answer is as complex as the human personality.

Fundamentally, a soccer exile is a success if the adopted team wins trophies. Arnold Muhren and Frans Thijssen are highly praised — and rightly so — now that their Dutch influnce has helped place lpswich at the pinnacle of the English league.

Ossie Ardiles, too, is or was or may be a much-lauded exile. A World Cup winner with Argentina two years ago, he took to England, with its sharp contrast in climate and playing style, like a duck to water. Tottenham Hotspurs were a disheveled crew until he took midfield command — with a mastery of British organization sprinkled catch phrases — "pride and poise" and "dynamic organization." He depended on the people of Oak-land to support him. Which they Ardiles' lawyer persuaded Spurs to release him at a critical time in the English calendar (a little matter of not signing a new contract while he is not granted his way), and off he went. But, oh dear, Cesar Menotti, his Argentine boss, is not amused by the anglicized Ardiles. "For Argentina, Ardiles must attack from midfield," said Menotti. "For Tot-tenham he is required to work back, to cover, to tackle. He is not good to me as defender."

Stormy Weather

Ardiles might well have been relieved to get back to london, ex-cept that there a storm is brewing. Even the English league secretary, level-headed Graham Kelly, is getting hot under the collar about the unfairness of such a talent's being available against some opponents and not others.

Meanwhile, the affairs of Barcelona and its imports continues on a bizarre course. Two months ago, Barcelona snatched West German vunderboy Bernd Schuster from under New York Cosmos' nose for $3 million. On the face of nose for $3 million. On the face of it a good snatch, except that the Spanish club already had its quota of two foreigners — strikers Allan Simonsen and Hans Krankl.

Barcelona also had a coach.

Ladislao Kubala, who knew nothing of the transfer until it happened and was away being should-ered aside by Helenio Herrera; whom he had replaced Still with it? Anyway, take it as read that Barcelona is in turmoil.

Either Simonsen or Krankl, men on astronomical salaries, would have to go. Even Schuster knew that. But a shrug of youth put the thought behind him. Kranki began to seek new employment and mucha compensation, and at least two

English and two German clubs began to court him. Schuster, meanwhile, passed his 21st birthday and began popping in goals at the rate of six in eight games. All's well that wends well? Well, last Sunday, just before Bar-eelona's derby match with Espanol, Schuster left the team in the lurch after an argument with his coach (Herrera, at last report). Schuster walked out, Barcelona was beaten, 1-0, and headlines centered on Schuster's accusations that teammates ignore him on the field. Newspapers have angered him by printing nude photos of his wife (posed for before they married), and apparently Schuster had clashed with his colleagues at a New Year's Eve champagne party at which he told them if they could play without him they must drink Barcelona, you will gather, isn't doing terribly well in the league. Neither is Real Madrid, and another import, Laurie Cunningham, Anyone who knows Cunningham knows that rhythm and blues is in his soul. Even with leg in plaster, he couldn't resist a celebrating: Madrid seemed to understand when the chih announced that Laurie is not a bad lad, just a very silly boy. He needs discipline."

If it ends there, well and good. But there are those on the club who blame his English girlfriend, Nikki Brown — "She doesn't help him stick to the rules" - and plenty of others who openly predict that, unless Madrid wins somthing in 1981, Cunningham will be shown the door.

Jan Zwartkruis, the Dutch team. manager, arrived home from Uruguay this week to quit (not surpris-ingly, after his part in the de-flowering of Dutch soccer), while Johan Cruyff, the playing inspirator of that nation is in London. Chelsea's financial people say they are discussing terms for his services — while Chelsea Manager and Coach Geoff Hurst says he knows nothing of the deal. Well, these are the '80s.

Raiders' Davis: Super Bowl Subplot

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Shrewdly, subtly, Al Davis has put up a blackand-silver smoke screen around

Instead of an analysis of the game between the Oakland Raiders and the Philadelphia Eagles, much of the emphasis somehow is on what will happen if Pete Rozelle, the National Football League commissioner, has to present the Super Bowl tropby to Al Davis, the Raider managing general genius who has accused i Super Bowl ticket-scalping. It's al-most as if St. Peter had to present the keys to the kingdom to Lucifer. "Til take a crash course from Bowie Kuhn," the commissioner says, "on how be presented the World Series trophy to Charlie

No Change

"He handed me the trophy when we won Super Bowl XI," says Davis, "and I didn't like him any better then than I do now."

But the real matchup in Super Bowl XV is not Rozello-Davis, it's. the Eagles-Raiders. And the real issue is not that the Raiders may win the Super Bowl - it's that Davis wants to move the Raiders to Los Angeles after what could be their finest hour, the first wild-card team since the 1970 merger to win the Super Bowl

Even before the Raiders outscored the San Diego Chargers, 34-27, for the American Conference championship, Davis talked about how proud he was of his players, his coaches and "the city," mean-

The Faithful

That's the same city he wants to abandon. If the Oakland people had abandoned the Raiders, then Davis would be justified. But the Raiders have had a sellout crowd of more than 50,000 at every game in the Oakland Coliscum for more than a decade.

But if Davis gets his way, those fans won't have a team next scason. Ever since the Rams left the Los Angeles Coliscum for Ana-heim Stadium, Davis has been ogling the empty 75,000-seat colise-um, where he has the promise of luxury boxes that would be worth "To compete in the '80s," says Davis, "we need more income than we can generate in Oakland now. I don't want an apologist team. I want a winner

But there is more to owning a sports franchise than building a winner. There is the matter of lovalty to the people who support that franchise. When a franchise accepts the name of a city, its owners also accept the trust of the people in that city. By trying to move his franchise to Los Angeles when the Oakland people are still support-ing him financially and vocally, Davis has betrayed that trust.

Davis likes to talk about how, growing up in Brooklyn, he learned how Branch Rickey and George Weiss built those wonder-ful Dodger and Yankee baseball

Davis does not talk about Wal-ter O'Mailey, but apparently he learned how to move a franchise to Los Angeles from him. O'Malley took the romance out of sport when he moved the Dodgers from Brooklyn to Los Angeles for the 1958 season. O'Malley was not justified in doing it; the Dodgers had turnaway crowds at Ebbets Field then. He did it anyway.

Rationale: Greed

Other franchises have been moved with instification when the people in a city no longer cared. But the only rationale for the Dodgers' move was O'Malley's greed. And the only rationale for the Raiders' move would be Davis'

The Age of Muddles

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — A group of learned men quoted in the paper the other day gave it as their opinion that Jimmy Carter will not go down in the history books as much of a president. Possibly so. A George Washington doesn't come along very often, and even if one did, under our present system for choosing presi-dents he would probably be wiped out in the colls for showing badly fitted false teeth in his television smile.

Trying to guess what history will say is tricky business. A hundred schoolchildren compelled to study U.S. history from John Kennedy to Ronald Reagan are more likely than not to lump all the presidents of the era under the label of "General Confusion" and let them go at

This is what most Americans do nowadays with the presidents he-tween Andrew Jackson and Abraham Lincoln and those between Andrew Johnson and William Mo-Kinley. Even people who have read some history have trouble telling you whether Franklin Pierce preceded Millard Filmore, where Zachary Taylor fitted in, how he differed from John Tyler, which Harrison was Benjamin and which William Henry, and what Chester A. Arthur did that was different from what Rutherford B. Haves did.

People a hundred years hence are probably going to be equally baf-fled about the five presidents we have had since 1961.

Among these five Carter has as good a chance as any of being re-membered honorably, if at all Imagine for a moment you are living in 2081 and cramming for a test on 20th-century presidents.

You can handle Theodore Roosevelt easily enough. The last hero of U.S. optimism. William Howard Taft, OK, he was the fat man, fattest president in history.

Woodrow Wilson? A snap.

World War I. League of Nations.

Warren Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover. Lump them all together under "Roaring Twenties." Harding was sexy and produced Teapot Dome; Coolidge did not choose to run; Hoover got caught in the stock market crash. Franklin Roosevelt: the big fellow. You know enough to write a 25-word essay on him. Harry Tru-man: gave 'em hell, big Cold War leader. Dwight Eisenhower: war hero, presided over eight years of unprecedented U.S. prosperity and

With John Kennedy, however, you run into a confusion of rapidly changing presidents and incomprehensible political snarls such as only a Ph.D. in history can hope to grasp. You probably know that Kennedy was assassinated, and possibly, if you prefer scandal to history, that he liked to play

But did Kennedy come before or after Richard Nixon? Well, Nixon was the one who had to quit because of Watergate, whatever Watergate was, and then he was succeeded by the vice president who had been appointed instead of elected. Was that Carter or John-

It couldn't have been Johnson because the fellow who succeeded Nixon was a nice guy, and Johnson was not a nice guy, but the one who had to quit because he made a mess of the Vietnam War.

It will probably take you a while to remember that it was Gerald Ford who followed Nixon, and even if you do remember you are probably going to forget altogether to include Carter, as people nowa-days forget to include James K. Polk when trying to remember who came between John Tyler and Zachary Taylor.

It is not so pleasant, to be sure, being remembered as a "nice guy," but it is better than not being remembered at all, for if Carter can get himself remembered way up there in the future, some student may be moved to ask the teacher what Carter did.

I fancy the teacher will have to reflect a minute before saying something like, "Well, he really didn't do anything terribly dread-ful at all." For the era 1961-1981, that is not a bad notice from the history critics.

The Codger as American Hero

By Michael Keman Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Walter Matthau is basically a

Over the years he has bent so many movie villains and character parts into his gruff but lov-able shape that he has made the codger an American hero. Imagine a 60-year-old man who walks like Groucho Marx trying to sneak into the house at 3 a.m., and has a face that looks like gets the girl. "For that I blame my wife Carol," Matthau said. "I get some part, I tell her, I can't do that. I tell her, most people my age are dead. I tell her, I'm too homely. But she says, you're amazing, you're the most handsome man I ever saw, you're like a young Olivier."

He shrugged his cheeks. "How can you fight that? My first wife thought I looked like Wallers Reserved." Wallace Beery.

For about four hours the other day Matthau and Jill Clayburgh stood on the sidewalk in front of the Supreme Court building to film a 20-second sbot for "First Monday in October," the movie version of the Henry Fonda-Jane Alexander stage hit about a liberal male Supreme Court justice and a new, conservative woman justice who fall in love.

Cold Work

Matthau wore a scarf over his ears and under his fedora when the camera wasn't rolling. Evenmally someone brought him a Russian-type down helmet. He liked it so much he forgot and wore it during a take.

Twice, three times, four times the stars had to climb out of a taxi and start up the steps towards their happily-ever-after finale. For every take Clay-burgh's hair had to be fluffed and her after-ski boots changed for shoes. Then they'd get in the cab, which was mounted on a flatbed so the camera could shoot through the windshield, and go around the block, stop, fought back the shadows left by a brilliant sun. Camera dollies and sound dollies shifted back and forth across rivers of cables. Extras strolled, again and again, through the background. The cabbie, also an actor, sang out ber line over and over: "Hey! What about the meter?

The picture was supposed to start last August and finish in October, but Clayburgh had been ill, delaying the windup. This location shot completes the shooting. The film is scheduled someone slept in it - and still to open on the first Monday of next October.

> Out on the pavement, Matthau and Clayburgh were shadowboxing. They have been getting along so well that co-producer Paul Heller is looking for another picture for them. The boxing stuff goes back a long way: Matthau weed to teach Supercolds boxing used to teach 5-year-olds boxing and basketball on the Lower East Side of New York in 1940, when he was with the WPA. He was born there. He can still do his East Side accent

"I used to imitate the landlady when I was 3," he said. "My mother thought I was hilarious."

Deadly Mimicry

His first job was selling drinks in the aisles at an Italian theater, and later he got onstage at age 11 (for 50 cents a performance) in a Yiddish language theater.

"I used to study the dialects, and I'd watch the actors night after night. The ear wasn't bad," he added quietly. (His minicry is among the most deadly in the

After a stretch in the Civilian Conservation Corps, he wound up in the Army Air Corps, flew combat as a B-24 gunner over Europe, studied journalism at Columbia University and in 1948 landed a part in "Arme of the Thousand Days" on Broadway. His Nafhan Detroit in "Guys and Doils" caught the eye of Neil Simon, who brought Marthau to "The Odd Couple" and the coro-nation of the American codger, turned lovable in "Hello Dolly" and emerged all growling and fuzzy in the films he did with Glenda Jackson. It was as though the movies needed a new kind of man, tough but feeling.

Most of all, the new man had to be unpretty, maybe even a bit overweight, maybe even a bit of a slob, but less slob than codger. The codger formally took over from the pretty hero as a role model in the film version of "The Odd Couple."

"I wanted to do Oscar, the big gry, as the good cook, the finicky one. Would have been a nice switch," muttered Matthan as he stirred lasagna on the trailer stove during a bunch break. The lasagna was cold and the microwave oven didn't work, so be was warming the stuff in a pan with a little water. He did look like Oscar, at that (His tastes in food are catholic. Once the CCC boys started a rebellion over food, and Matthau couldn't understand what the problem was. He thought it tasted great.)
"I don't know as there's any special pattern to this persona thing "he mused. "I'm a character actor, and suddenly this role of Oscar just crystalized into a commercial hit. There used to be a lot of French actors who were big as middle-aged men: Raimu, Gabin, Louis Jouvet." But they didn't get the girl.

PEOPLE: Fashion Arones 2.... Other Chic on Reagans Fashion Arbiters Turn

Nancy Reagan isn't on the new U.S. list of best-dressed women, but that's not to say she's dowdy: She appeared so frequently on the list before becoming the prospec-tive First Lady that the fashion arbiters had already voted her into the Hall of Fame and out of com-petition. As for President elect Reagan, the committee that makes the annual selections for this special fashion niche decided he would have to do something about his blue-jean and wide-shoulderedsuit image if he is to be considered. But not everyone associated with the new administration was excluded from the list, announced by fashion publicist Elemor Lambert. Cited as exemplary clotheshorses were Gen. Alexander Haig Jr., the secretary of state nominee; Sen. Charles Percy, R.-Ill., the new Senate majority leader; and Jerome Zipkin, a New York businessman who is a friend of the Reagans. There was no best-dressed list last year because of the Iran hostage situation. This year's 12 bestdressed women are: Paloma Picasso, artist, jewelry designer and daughter of Pablo Picasso; entertainer Diana Ross; the Duchess of Kent; Olympia de Rothschild of Paris; Baroness Vittorio de Nora of Milan and New York; Mrs. Fran-cis Kellogg of New York; Con-stance Melion of Washington; Irith Landau, French heiress; Mrs. Geoffrey Holder, actress and wife of the dancer, Mrs. Christian de Guigne II of San Francisco; Estee Lander, the cosmetics tycoon: and Grace, Counters of Dudley. The other men are President Jose Loother men are President Jose Lo-pez Portillo of Mexico; Carlos Ortiz de Rozas, Argentine ambassa-dor to the United States; James Hoge, publisher of the Chicago Sun-Times, Alistair Cooke, British television commentator; Earl E.T. Smith Jr. of Palm Beach; Roger Penske, racing car driver and head of Penske Corp. of New Jersey; Thomas Ammann, Swiss art dealer; Henry McIlhenny of New Orleans and Philadelphia; and artist David

A photographer complained to Ronald Reagan that be was getting a poor view of the horse the president-elect was receiving as a gift from Mexican President Jose Lo-pez Portillo. The photographer asked Reagan to turn the 7-year-old white Arab stallion around, inasting that his lens was looking at "the wrong end." Reagan, not missing a beat, countered: "You've covered politics. You should be used to that." The borse continued
